

Robert Elliott - Brother of executed inmate

Robert: What you come to realise that the state of Texas...everything is about process, you know. A long time ago, we had an attorney general for the state, his name was Daniel Morales, a Mexican American and, he's now in jail right now for fraud. They said, 'they've got this evidence here that might prove this...this person on death row innocent don't you think you should, you know, postpone the execution until we can, you know.' And, his statement was, 'it doesn't, it doesn't matter, he got a fair trial.' And that right there, I think, more than anything else just... just delineated the philosophy of the state, it's about process. I always thought the justice system was about justice, you know, how much, I mean, how much is too much to spend? Or how much time is too much time to take? Before, you know... you commit such a finality on a person, you know, and the sad part about it is, if you make a mistake, there's no correcting it.
